Don Winslow
Savages

320pp Tp $29.95

In his latest novel, Winslow has jumped towards an almost abstract style with his tale of two low-level marijuana dealers and the attempted takeover of their business by a brutal Mexican cartel. With sharp dialogue - and outbursts of even sharper violence - this novel lands somewhere between Elmore Leonard and James Ellroy. Yet Winslow feels original and truly embedded in the southern Californian beaches and malls that he makes his own. If you've enjoyed Winslow before, this novel marks a change of gear, combining the violent, ripped-from-the-headlines feel of The Power of the Dog (Pb $24.95) with the laid-back surfer milieu of his Dawn Patrol novels. If you've not met Don before, this story will throw you in the deep end, but that's where it's all happening. - Adrian

CRIME SCENE WITH ANNABEL BLAY

P D James turns 90 years old this month and, courtesy of Allen & Unwin, Abbey's is celebrating by hosting cake and champagne on the afternoon of Tuesday 3 August. So drop in and share some with us! Faber is celebrating by reissuing many of her backlist titles in a handsome new look, including volumes from the Dalgliesh series, such as The Black Tower (#5), Death of an Expert Witness (#6) and Devices and Desires (#8), as well as the standalone The Children of Men (all Pb $14.99), plus many others!

Meanwhile, praise pours in for I Kill by Giorgio Faletti (Tp $32.95). The Independent Weekly said it "Makes you feel a part of the madness in Monte Carlo with its great depth in characters, fine threadlines... and explosive surprises", while Publisher's Weekly raved "As the victim count mounts, so does the suspense in this fine cat-and-mouse game of skill and subtlety."

But our local crime authors are getting great reviews too! Sulari Gentill's A Few Right Thinking Men was The Age's Pick of the Week, described as "...richly drawn and involving... a cut above much Australian crime. It's well researched and atmospheric, with a brisk pace, colourful characters and charming period dialogue."

And how can you resist The Old School (Tp $32.95) with a comment like this: "Newton's bitter-sweet thriller is an arresting debut: astonishingly accomplished and as authentic as a .38 bullet wound. File between D for Disher and T for Temple and sweat on the sequel" from Underbelly writer Andrew Rule. Matthew Reilly chimes in: "The writing is razor-sharp and the dialogue sizzles with tough-as-nails authenticity. Newton is a writer to watch."

Adrian Hyland's Gunshot Road (Tp $32.95) is also praised by Sue Turnbull in the Sydney Morning Herald, describing main character Tempest as "...one of the most beguiling characters to appear in Australian crime fiction in the past 20 years" and concluding that "...this is an outstanding crime novel that, like Peter Temple's Broken Shore, raises the bar for Australian crime fiction to a new level".
